The first of the great principles of the American Revolution was the right of the people to be free from the control of a foreign power. This principle was the basis of the Declaration of Independence, which declared that the United States were free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown. The second principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a tyrannical government. This principle was the basis of the Constitution, which established a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. The third principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a corrupt government. This principle was the basis of the Bill of Rights, which guaranteed the rights of the people against the power of the government.

The fourth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a despotic government. This principle was the basis of the Federalist Papers, which argued for the adoption of the Constitution. The fifth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a tyrannical government. This principle was the basis of the Anti-Federalist Papers, which argued against the adoption of the Constitution. The sixth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a corrupt government. This principle was the basis of the Whig movement, which sought to reform the government. The seventh principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a despotic government. This principle was the basis of the Democratic movement, which sought to reform the government. The eighth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a tyrannical government. This principle was the basis of the Republican movement, which sought to reform the government. The ninth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a corrupt government. This principle was the basis of the Unionist movement, which sought to reform the government. The tenth principle was the right of the people to be free from the control of a despotic government. This principle was the basis of the Nationalist movement, which sought to reform the government.
